Introducing Borneo

Borneo is the 3rd biggest island in the world and boasts endless treasures to entice adventurous travellers. It's home to some of the world's oldest rainforests and an incredible diversity of wildlife, including the endemic proboscis monkey, Bornean pygmy elephant and, of course, orangutans. The touristic part of Borneo is split between the Indonesian state of Kalimantan and the Malaysian states of Sabah and Sarawak. Kalimantan is the wilder cousin of Sabah and Sarawak, with boat travel a necessity. For world-class dive resorts and easier travel logistics, visit Malaysian Borneo.

Whichever you choose, prepare for an unforgettable wildlife experience in the depths of its ancient rainforests. Enjoy riverboat trips and wildlife watching on the banks, hike through untamed jungle, and visit wildlife sanctuaries for up-close encounters with weird and wonderful creatures.

How to Get to Borneo

There are no direct flights to Borneo from Europe or the Americas. To reach Kalimantan, most flights require a stopover in Jakarta or Surabaya in Indonesia, or Kuala Lumpur.

The easiest way to tackle large distances in Borneo is by air and domestic flight routes connect all of the main cities. In Malaysian Borneo, most travel is by private vehicle but there are long-distance buses too. If travelling throughout Kalimantan, expect some longer boat journeys through the rainforest. Ferries are the best way to travel to the islands.

When & Weather – Borneo

Borneo has a tropical climate and is hot and humid for much of the year. Showers can occur at any time of year but April-September is typically drier. Temperatures stay around 27-32°C / 81-90°F year-round. In the depths of rainy season, access to certain landmarks may be limited. Festivals are another thing to bear in mind as the calendar gets busy in July. During festival season, restaurant and service closures are common so plan ahead. If you're coming for diving, you'll find whale sharks in Lankayan from April to May, and turtles in Sipadan from July to August.

Who will Borneo Appeal To?

Borneo is a wildlife lovers' dream, both on land and in the water. Bring your adventurous spirit and your camera to make the most out of your trip. Borneo is perfect for: Wildlife fans, adventurous travellers, dive enthusiasts, nature lovers, photographers, families with teens
